THE WOMAN I AM TODAY

When I try to remember the girl that I was at age 18, it is almost impossible because there is no trace of her that remains today except the deep abiding love I feel for my family.

However, as a teenager my family consisted of those who shared my bloodline. Today my family is the totality of all whom God created and that deep abiding love extends to them.

I am proud of the woman I am at age 50. A woman of compassion, empathy, and gratitude for life regardless of my circumstances. I will continue to spend my life sharing the truth, hope, and love of God and when I am released, I will do this in an even greater capacity.
