The Woman I am Today

At the beginning of my incarceration, I cheated myself out of the opportunity my mother told me I could be “someone great”. I now know I have the ability to be a positive productive member of society. I am 43 years old now; I have challenged myself and accomplished making the rough patches smooth from my imperfections and past mistakes.

The reason I believe I will be an asset to society is because of the person I am today, a woman who is not scared to look in the mirror anymore. I am proud of the person I have become. I am confident my life in society would be in giving back.
