THE WOMAN I AM TODAY

Becoming incarcerated at a young age with no sense of direction or guidance, and being able to become the woman I am today has become my sole motivation as to why I have now become a part of the solution, as opposed to being part of the problem. I have participated in countless groups that focus on self-esteem and self-worth, the importance of freedom as well as cognitive behavior therapy which enables oneself to completely change one's way of thinking.

If granted my freedom, it is my responsibility to pass my wealth of knowledge on to other unloved and misled teenagers. Help put them in positions to accomplish their goals. Push them to open their minds and tap into the plethora of resources available to them. Hopefully, I'll be given the opportunity.
