THE WOMAN I AM TODAY

I want to be an asset to society by becoming employed in the construction field. I like to be hands-on and creative. Graduating from the building trade's course and receiving my certificate in 2011 has allowed me to acquire the skills I need to pursue this trade.

Given the opportunity for release will allow me to give back to the community by teaching young women and teens how important and precious life is and how easily it is to destroy it. I want to share my life experiences by helping those who are walking destructive paths. Life is full of unexpected twists and turns, how you make it through is what counts. I want to be able to be their voice when they feel like they don't have one. To stand up for what's right and encourage them when they feel defeated. Most importantly, I want to share the knowledge of "what you do with your life while making changes counts the most. Defeat should never be an option".
